Light Worlds presents a unique opportunity to experience two distinctive – yet complementary – approaches to photographic experimentation and abstraction.

Wynn Bullock (1902-1975) is widely recognized as a master mid-twentieth century artist whose photographic imagery is distinguished by its deeply searching and explorative nature. Mainly noted for his black-and-white images, Wynn also created during the early 1960s a significant body of experimental work in color which he called "Color Light Abstractions." This joint exhibition will feature numerous examples of these extraordinary images, which depict fluid, visual worlds of swirling color, mysterious light, and elusive form.

Robert Strizich, known chiefly as a composer of contemporary classical music, has also been a dedicated photographer for several decades, focusing predominately on camera-less work. Some years ago, he created a compelling experimental body of work consisting of abstract black-and-white images, comprising both what he terms "light drawings" and "folded-paper photograms." In addition to a selection of these complex and intriguing earlier works, a number of Bob's more recent bold, dramatic "scanograms" will also be on display.

Radius Gallery is open weekly from Wednesday through Sunday, 12 - 5 PM and by appointment.
